Climate scientist David Goodrich documents his bike rides along 'routes of the Underground Railroad' in this illuminating blend of history and travelogue. Throughout, Goodrich reveals how slavery is remembered and misremembered in America, and makes a convincing case that 'national trauma, like a wound, tends to heal when it's exposed to air.' It's a harrowing yet inspirational ride -

Goodrich's 4-year 3000 mile bike ride took him from New Orleans to Ontario, with stops at sites connected to Harriet Tubman here in Kennett Square. He returns to revisit his stop at London Grove Meeting, and to discuss his new book.

All are welcome. Event is free. Refreshments follow the reading.
